Employer Close-Up: Admiralty House Communications Museum An Interview with Sarah Wade, Museum Manager

Career Development Specialist: How long have you been partnered with Visions Employment Plus Inc.?

Sarah Wade, Museum Manager: Admiralty House Communications Museum has been partnered with Visions Employment Plus Inc. since about 2010.

Career Development Specialist: How did you first become aware of Supported Employment?

Sarah Wade, Museum Manager: We were first contacted directly by Visions Employment. The museum really needed to hire someone to maintain the grounds. After chatting with the kind folks at Visions Employment, it seemed like a great opportunity to partner with a local community organization.

Career Development Specialist: How has your experience as an inclusive employer enhanced your business environment?

Sarah Wade, Museum Manager: Partnering with Visions Employment each year is an enormous benefit to Admiralty House Communications Museum. It allows us to support local individuals who are looking to gain valuable job experiences. Allowing someone the opportunity to work with a job coach is invaluable to our organization. In addition, having this continuity of our partnership gives someone a chance to get familiar with their job, increase their confidence and help them become more independent.

Working with Visions Employment year after year has also allowed the museum to build a wonderful professional relationship with the staff. It has made looking after the grounds a more manageable task because we can depend on Visions Employment to know our organization and partner us with individuals that will be the right fit for us.

Career Development Specialist: Is there anything you would like to say to other employers who may be reluctant to collaborate with a Supported Employment Agency?

Sarah Wade, Museum Manager: Take a chance to work with Visions Employment! The staff members are fantastic to work with as they really strive to help you achieve your organization's goals while helping so many members of the community.
